

Life insurance isn't for the people who die.
It's for the people who live.

Preston Newby was a youth minister. He and his wife, Tara, were driving with their son to visit family, excited to announce a new baby on the way. In keeping with the kind of person Preston was, he stopped to help at the scene of an accident. That's when he was struck by another car and killed. He was only 24.

Fortunately, they had made the decision several years earlier to purchase life insurance. So despite the emotional upheaval that Preston's death caused, Tara, a stay-at-home mom, and her two sons were able to carry on financially as they had before.
